

Providing informal counseling and social support

When it comes to health and well-being, counseling and social support is often just as important as physical medical attention. Poverty, unemployment, discrimination, and isolation characterize many communities where CHWs work. When clients find themselves having difficulty coping with day-to-day events, CHWs can provide all-important support and encouragement.